TRAIN HITS AUTO; MAN AND TWO WOMEN KILLED

Three persons were killed, two almost instantly, when the car in which they were returning to San Francisco from a ride down the peninsula Sunday afternoon was demolished by a Southern Pacific train at the Brittain crossing in San Carlos. Frank L. Sheerin, 68, a building contractor of San Francisco was the driver of the car. With him were Mrs. Sheerin, and Mrs. Dennis Sheerin, a sister-in-law.

The party was driving north along the highway. At the second crossing north of the Finger bridge, the driver evidently decided to turn onto the old highway east of the tracks, possibly to avoid the heavy traffic. He turned the car onto the tracks, evidently without noticing a speeding passenger train bound north. He was on the western side of the tracks before he appeared to notice the train, which was then within a few yards of the car.

Seeing the train almost upon him the driver gave his powerful car all the gas possible, and the machine leaped forward with a bound. At the same the brakes of the train were applied with all their force, causing the wheels to slide on the track. It was too late, however, for with a crash the train caught the car amidships, and carried it, twisted and crushed for eleven hundreed feet along the tracks.

The accident was witnessed by thousands of motorists on the highway, and by Chief of Police Wheeler of San Carlos. The crowd watched spellbound as the heavy car was driven along the tracks by the impact of the speeding train. When the train was finally brought to a stop the crowd gathered about the wrecked machine and the three passengers were quickly removed from the wreckage.

When taken from their car Sheerin and his wife were found to be still alive, but they passed away before they could be taken to a hospital. Mrs. Dennis Sheerin lived a short time after being taken to the community hospital.

An inquest was held upon the three bodies Monday at the parlors of Layng & Tinney. It was found by the jury that accident was entirely unavoidable as far as the train crew was concerned, and no recommendations were made. The Sheerins were removed to San Francisco for interment.

Frank Sheerin was a class-mate of D. E. O'Keefe and James T. O'Keefe of this city, he having graduated with them from St Mary's College when it was on the Mission Road in 1884. He was a handsome youth, bright and ambitious. He was beloved for his genial manner by his school mates and admired for his manliness and esposal of everything that stood for fair play and justice. He graduafed with high honors in his class. Two of his sons became Jesuit priests, one is now in Rome and the other is at Los Gatos. An only daughter is a nun. Mr. Sheerin was an outstanding figure in the business world. His untimely death is a severe blow to his family and friends.

His father, the late Daniel Sheerin, was the father of the marble and monument business in San Francisco. In the early days of San Francisco his marble works was close to Cavalry Cemetery. There he amassed a large fortune. He was highly respected and honored by the people of San Francisco. His son was eqally as honorable and respected in the city, where both spent the greater portion of their lives.

Frank Sheerin will long live in the memory of his classmates, who loved and honored him as a playful youth and as an upstand-citizen of worth and probity.

CITY NEARLY DOUBLES FLOOD SUFFERS FUND

Almost twice the amount asked by the Red Cross for relief of refugees in the flood district of the south has been raised by the local chapter of the Red Cross. At a late hour yesterday the amount raised by the local chapter was $1713.69. The quota set for this district was $1000. Although the drive for funds is over, contributions continue to come in, according to Mrs. Z. T. Thorning, chairman of the chapter. More than $500 of this amount was sent in this week.

The following letter was received from the national headquarters by the local chapter after the quota of $1000 had been sent in last week:

Chairman, Redwood City Chapter,
American Red Cross,
Redwood City, California.

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate your Chapter os so promptly sending us double the amount of the original quota which was assigned you for the Mississippi disaster relief fnd. Will yiu please express to the good people of our community our appreciation for their generous contributions.

You may be sure that every cent contributed is greatly needed as the seriousness of the situation is indeed appalling. Any further donations should be forwarded to this office as received.

Very sincerely yours,
R. E. ARUE,
For Asst. to Vice-Chairman

The need for money for the relief of sufferers in the flooded areas is still very great according to word received this week. A letter showing how the funds raised are being used was received this week from San Francisco headquarters and gives the following facts:

"When it is realized that every time $3.00 is spent on one of these refugees, one million dollars of the relief fund is consumed —in other words, that the full ten millions requested will only provide $30.00 per person, which must suffice for clothing, shelter, food and medical care for a period of probably two months, it is obvious that the ten million dollars asked for will be totally inadequate to the task of emergency care.

SAN CARLOS MAN STRIKES WOMAN ON HIGHWAY

When crossing the state highway at Lomita Park about 10 o'clock Monday night, Mrs. Emma Seifert of 1924 Cabrillo street, San Francisco, was struck and fatally injured by a car driven by John E. Cowgill, former postmaster and station agent of San Carlos. Mrs. Seifert was crossing the highway in company with Mrs. J. McDermott of Lomita Park, when, it is alleged, she stepped in the path of the Cowgill car which was traveling south at what witnesses declare to have been a moderate rate of speed.

Cowgill stopped and rendered what aid he could. He was assisted by three brothers, E. A., E. C., and C. H. Bohn of San Carlos who were passing in another car. The injured woman was taken in the Bohn car to the Mills Memorial hospital, where she passed away soon after.

An inquest was held and the case investigated Tuesday afternoon. The case was found to have been accidental, and the driver was absolved from responsibility for the death of Mrs. Seifert. It was also shown that following the accident Cowgill had done all that he could for the woman, but that her injuries had been so serious that her death was inevitable.

4 GENERATIONS REPRESENTED IN SCHOOL PLAY

At the pageant that will take place Saturday evening at Sequoia Union High School, Miss Murial Maloney, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Maloney of Menlo Park, will represent four generations of her family in San Mateo county. Her maternal grandparents were Mr. and Mrs. William Lloyd who came to Searsville in the sixties. In 1874 Lloyd gave a tract of land to the Searsville School district, there many of the young folks were educated. When the Searsville lake was constructed the old school site was absorbed by the big pond. The oldest daughter of the Lloyds married P. H. McEvoy, for several terms supervisor of this township. Their daughter was united in marriage to C. E. Maloney, whose father, the late P. J. Maloney, was assessor of the county in the eighties. They had an only child, Murial, whose grandfather, the late John McEvoy, arrived here in 1852 with General John C. Fremont, when the latter made the famous trip from Monterey to San Francisco. The general camped for several days to rest his men and horses on El Camino Real, opposite the Selby estate. The general was infatuated with the pleasant surroundings, agreeing with McEvoy to come back and buy the property afterwards purchased by the late Mayor Selby. The general never came back but McEvoy did and bought the adjoining ranch for years afterwards known as the McEvoy ranch bordering on the Woodside road and including the Five Points district of Redwood City.

The young lady is naturally proud of her ancestry who helped to settle and build up the peninsula and who aided in making history for this section. She intends to enter Stanford on graduating from Sequoia.

OWNERS AND REALY MEN TO DISCUSS LAND VALUES

Property values in the downtown section of Redwood City will be discussed at a public meeting of owners and real estate men Friday night, May 13 at 8 o'clock in the council chamber at the city hall.

James G. Stafford, the expert in charge of the revaluation of taxable land and improvements, will conduct the meeting.

A map of the district which will be considered is being prepared, bearing suggested relative percentage values. The point of highest value will be designated as the 100 per cent point. Other block frontages in the downtown area will be shown with the percentage of value fixed relatively with the 100 per cent point.

After the relative percentages are definitely decided they will be converted into terms of dollar values per unit foot. The unit foot, used by Stafford's organization as a standard measurement is one foot of frontage by 100 feet of depth.

The use of the unit foot facilitates a comparison between lots of varying size and shape. In the final computation of individual lot values, an accepted mathematical table is used for the purpose of applying the unit value to the actual depth and shape of the lots. A separate table is used for figuring the additional value due to location at or near corners.

Stafford urges that all interested property owners attend the meeting Friday night and take part in the discussion. so that a reliable consensus of opinion may be obtained as a foundation for the detailed appraisal.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

State gasoline revenues under the new three-cent levy adopted by the legislature which is believed certain of signature by Governor Young, will aggregate in excess of $24,000,000 per year, it is estimated by financial experts. Increased travel in the state, it was pointed out, jumped receipts under the two-cent tax for the quarter just ended to $4,332,586.62. This was a gain of $382,564.27 over the corresponding period a year ago. Under the two-cent tax the receipts are divided equally between the state and the various counties for highway construction work, but the additional cent tax will be used exclusively by the state for new construction.

"Flunked" in his final examinations, Khumar Shri Madhavsihji, prince of Kathiwar, India, and reported to be a former school mate of the Duke of York, is en route to England, where arrangements are being made for his marriage to a princess of his native land, it was learned at the State College of Agriculture at Davis, where the prince has been a student during the last fifteen months. The prince left for London, traveling by way of Washington, where he said he had a luncheon engagement with President Coolidge. College authorities said the prince has indicated he will make the trip back from India next year to take the tests over again.

The stork ran a losing race in California last year, falling below the totals reported for the preceding twelve months, the state bureau of vital statistics has disclosed. Births for the year totaled 83,372. Los Angeles county reported 31,036 new native sons and daughters as compared with 32,627 in 1925; San Francisco 8,342 as against 8,657; Alameda county, 6,739 against 6,874, and San Diego county 3,112 as compared with 3,181 in the preceding period. Wedding bells chimed with increasing frequency, however, according to the state report, the 1926 marriage total being 56,664 as compared to 55,081 the year previous.

A number of feature entertainments are planned for the open air theater seating 1500, constructed as a part of the Sportsman's Exposition being held on San Francisco's Marina from May 14 to 22. The theater is constructed at the base of the scenic mountain ranges and has been given a natural setting to make it look like a forest theater. It is used for lectures and motion pictures illustrating the varied attractions of Northern California as a sportsmen's paradise, for style shows, for meetings and demonstrations.

An investigation was ordered at Folsom state penitentiary following announcement by Warden Court Smith that a cache of crudely made counterfeit coins, ranging from quarters to dollars, has been discovered in the prison stone quarry. The cache of thirty odd coins, hidden in a crevice under tons of high piled granite, was believed by prison officers to be part of the supply manufactured two years ago during the counterfeiting operations for which H. D. Welch, a former guard, was sent to federal penitentiary.

Recent auction of Rudolph Valentino's personal effects returned $96,654, according to a report filed in probate court at Los Angeles by George Ullman, executor of the screen actor's estate. The largest individual sum was derived from the sale of Valentino's Isotta Franchini automobile, which brought $7,900. His power boat Phoenix sold for $3,200 and his Avian Voison motor for $2,200. Numerous items still remain unsold, Ullman said.

Work has started on the branch line the Southern Pacific company will built up the Yuba river to tap the rich fruit section in the river bottoms. The new branch will be built on top of an old levee and branches off south of the Yuba river bridge going east for five miles. The terminal will be on the property of the Earl Fruit Company, which has developed a pear orchard of more than 300 acres.

Shasta county has paid C. J. Winters and two sons of Oak Run $200 for killing forty coyotes in three days. Twenty-one coyote pups were taken from one hole. Three of the forty coyotes were grown, but the others were all pups. Winters and his sons work on the farm on week days, but they hunt coyotes Sundays. Just now coyote hunting is paying better than farming.

J. D. Reynolds, rector of the Emmanuel Episcopal church of Grass Valley for the past few years, has resigned and will return to London to take charge of a former parish there. He served as a chaplain with the British army during the world war.

Apropoe of the Nevada gold discovery at Weepah, one of the most startling gold scares in history was started at W. R. Hearst's ranch at San Simeon, Calif., by Sid Grauman, Los Angeles picture house owner. One idle afternoon Grauman rubbed the brass off a new door hinge onto a rock, left it lying on the ground and casually called a workman's attention to it. He thought it was gold, and, along with some dozens of his colleagues working on the main ranch building, suspended work and went prospecting. It was days before the work force could be reassembled.

Maintaining that their work can be efficiently carried on with less income, members of the state board of pharmacy have voluntarily reduced the annual re-registration fee for the 7,000 pharmacists of California from $2 to $1, it was announced by the state board of control.

Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, former Senator James D. Phelan and other prominent San Franciscans were the speakers at dedication ceremonies last Sunday at the new reinforced concrete bridge spanning the San Lorenzo river at Brackney, Santa Cruz county.

The Napa Flower and Garden club will hold its annual flower show May 14.

At a special election approval was given to a proposed bond issue of $38,000 to provide a new municipal water system for the city of Williams. The present system has been condemned by the state board of health.

Aphis of many different varieties have appeared in swarms in various parts of the San Joaquin Valley. In Kern county ladybirds are being imported to combat the pests. In Fresno county Fred P. Roullard, the county horticultural commissioner, has advised a contact spray.

The discovery of new oil pools at Long Beach and the attendant construction of oil apparatus boosted the building permit records of Long Beach to $1,182,300 for the month of April. In view of the fact that only $490,000 was recorded here for April, 1926, the April amount is a considerable rise.

One of the largest eruptions seen on Lassen Peak in many years started at 4 o'clock in the morning of May 4. Smoke from the crater poured forth for 45 minutes, rolling high into the sky. A strong wind then carried the smoke clouds southward. No rumbling was heard by valley inhabitants.

Dr. Kurt Ziegler, German consul-general at San Francisco, will take a two months' leave of absence beginning July 3, according to announcement made last week. Miss Myrtle Larher has the distinction of being the first woman ever sentenced in Nevada county to a jail term for driving an automobile while intoxicated. On pleading guilty to the charge, she was given a $300 fine or a like number of days in the county bastile. Not being able to pay the fine she went to jail.

The packing house district of Watsonville, "The Apple City," was swept by fire last week with a loss estimated at from $150,000 to $300,000. The flames destroyed ten packing houses, twelve residences and three box cars loaded with lettuce. For a time the whole western section of the city was menaced.

Married at nineteen, but now seventy-one, Mrs. Sylvana Spooner, who resides five miles southwest of Willows, has become a grandmother for the fifty-third time. A son was recently born to one of her daughters, Mrs. Carl V. Taylor. Mrs. Spooner has seventy-one living descendants, including six great-grand children. Of her own sixteen children, twelve survive.

Mokelumne Hill, Tuolumne county, is rapidly becoming a center for numerous summer homes. John Heafy, millionaire contractor of Oakland, recently purchased eighty acres of land and the grounds are to be set out in golf course, tennis court, swimming pool and numerous outdoor features. Heafy plans to erect a $25,000 summer home which promises to be modern in every respect.

Thoroughbred hogs from northern and southern California, many of them winners of trophies and ribbons in past competitions, paraded before an expert judges' committee last Saturday and Sunday at the show of the Peninsula Kennel club on the Clark estate at San Mateo. The entry list totalled more than 500, making the event the largest of its kind ever held on the Pacific coast.

A test well is to be drilled by Modesto people near Waterford about ten miles south of Oakdale, according to a report. The movement has started chiefly as a result of the striking of gas in water wells. The nearest drilling so far has been close to Oakdale near Knights Landing. One wildcat near Oakdale a few years ago went more than 4,200 feet. It failed commercially but has been reported as having had some showings.

Hope for the retention of the San Francisco land office faded when Edmund Robinson, assistant register, received orders from Washington to report for duty at the Sacramento office July 1. Since it was announced several weeks ago that the San Francisco land office would be consolidated with that at Sacramento and the Visalia office merged with the one in Los Angeles, chambers of commerce and other organizations have made vigorous protests to Washington. The consolidation is made for economic reasons, the interior department announces.

The first rattlesnake of the season was killed in Putah Creek canyon near Woodland by James Gifford, a Boy Scout of that city, whose attention was attracted by the snake's rattling under a log upon which he was standing. It was nearly four feet long.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

Von Moltke

"SIRE," said Napoleon III's minister of war, "all is in absolute readiness for the Prussian campaign, down to the last button on the last gaiter of the last soldier."

Now, this was one of the most monumental lies ever uttered.

Napoleon III was well aware that Europe distrusted him. He knew the French were naturally restless, that they had had a long era of military glory, and that a few years of humdrum peace might lead them to weary of him. So he went on the principle that a war every four years would keep them content, swell France's martial renown and make safe his own crown.

In the first decade of the Nineteenth century Napoleon the Great had crushed Prussia to the dust and humiliated her king. The son of that king was on the Prussian throne in 1870 and the great Napoleon's nephew ruled France.

Bismarck, Von Moltke and other Prussian statesmen had foreseen trouble with France and were well prepared for it, even if they did not (as many think) secretly bring about the conflict. France, on the other hand, was totally unready for any such clash. Prussia's revenge for the sixty-year-old injuries was at hand. The overt occasion of the Franco-Prussian war was as follows:

Queen Isabella of Spain was deposed. The Spanish crown was offered to Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern, a relative to King William of Prussia. Napoleon III at once declared that such selection would destroy the "balance of power" and leave France exposed to Prussian attack on east and south. He therefore demanded that Leopold's candidature be withdrawn. King William meekly obeyed. Utterly deceived by such submission, Napoleon went a step further and demanded a pledge from William that no Prussian prince should ever sit on the Spanish throne. William promptly refused to grant so absurd a request and publicly snubbed the ambassador who transmitted it. This was such an excuse as Napoleon had longed for. France at once declared war on Prussia (July 19, 1870) and rushed a body of troops to the German frontier.

So far, so good. But, owing to graft and incompetency, France's army was in wretched condition. Yet France went mad with patriotic zeal. The feats of the first Napoleon against Prussia were recalled. Everyone expected a triumphal march to the Prussian capital. The cry "On to Berlin!" was on all lips.

In contrast to this, Prussia's troops were in splendid preparation. The north and south German states (on many of which Napoleon III had been told he might rely for neutrality or even aid) unanimously joined Prussia, sinking internecine grievances in a common cause; 477,000 men were mustered, as against France's 310,000. The German forces were divided into three armies, which at a signal crept unchecked across the Rhine like a huge three-headed snake, preceded by a cloud of Uhlans, sweeping all before them and striking at France's very heart. King William was commander in chief, with Marshal von Moltke, the peerless tactician, as his chief of staff. The French armies, commanded by Napoleon III in person, made Metz their headquarters.

On August 2, part of Napoleon's northern army drove a handful of Prussians out of the town of Saarbruck. But thereafter Prussia acted ever on the offensive. The French, individually, fought like heroes, but they were no match for their stronger foes. In two armies France's incompetently commanded, ill-equipped forces were hurled back and prevented from uniting. One of these armies was led by Bazaine, former conqueror of Mexico; the other by MacMahon, afterwards president of France. Bazaine was successively beaten at Courcelles, Mars-la-Tour and Gravelotte (August 14, 16 and 18) and was penned up in the city of Metz. MacMahon moved forward to aid him, but on September 1, was surrounded at Sedan, and next day was forced to surrender with forty generals, 4,000 lesser officers and 84,000 men.

Napoleon III, who was with MacMahon's army, was also captured and packed off a prisoner to a German fortress. At news of his capture and the disgraceful failure of French arms rage and mortification seized all France. Napoleon was deposed; his wife and son were compelled to flee secretly to England; and, September 4, a republic was proclaimed.

On September 19, the Germans besieged Paris. On September 28 Bazaine surrendered at Metz. The latter city, snatched from Germany in the days of Charles V, once more was held by its original masters. Paris fell after a long and gallant siege; armies sent to relieve it were beaten. France was at Prussia's mercy. On March 1, 1871, the victorious Germans entered Paris; passing through the mighty Arc de Triomphe, which had been erected to commemorate the martial triumphs of France; thus adding a climax to perhaps the grimmest irony in the annals of warfare.

The provinces of Alsace and Lorraine and an indemnity of $1,000,000,000 were exacted by the conquerors—a fairly cheap fee for curing France of Napoleonism!

Blood-Sucking Spider

The huge and hideous bird-eating spider now at the London zoo, which no one dare handle except his keeper, whose immunity to venom has earned him the nickname of "Scorpion Bill," was a stowaway. This spider, which catches and sucks the blood of small birds, not only bites with fatal results, but is covered with red bristles which sting far worse than nettles. It was found by a Catford fruiterer in a bunch of South American bananas he was handling.

EXPANDING THE UNIVERSE

IF one with reasonably good eyesight were to stand each night watching the stars as they pass in slow procession from east to west, he would see about six thousand tiny points pass across the firmament. One of these is quite a near neighbor, so close, in fact, that light is able to traverse the distance between this star and the world in a little over 140 days. The others range from ten to hundreds of times this distance and most are beyond even expression in the figures. Yet these stars are seen and can be counted.

Now comes an astronomer with a photographic plate so sensitive that in the small space of a few degrees in the sky he can record the presence of 100,000 stars—stars even beyond the power of the most powerful telescope of the present time to make visible to the eye.

So science pushing out beyond even the telescopically visible universe finds suns which, were they counted would run into millions, and yet no end is seen. Possibly the next generation will have brought these faint suns into sight and measured and weighed them and subjected them to the searching and analyzing beam of the spectroscope. And then yet other suns will be found just beyond the realm of prehensibility.

Every new discovery, such as the photographic plate, widens the human conception of the universe, and brings us a little nearer the understanding of the ultimate cause. The ultimate will never be found, but even so, each little approach lends interest to what we already know; while above all is the great mystery of what we never can fully understand or really comprehend, but which we know—that although separated by distances so great that they cannot be even expressed, these stars are each performing their appointed part in a great plan, in a plan in which every human being has a small part to perform.

CLEANING UP THE TOWN

DURING the coming week Cean-Up and Paint Up Week will be observed in Redwood City. Many of the civic and social organizations of the town have shown an active interest in the proposed campaign, and much improvement will, without doubt, result.

Redwood City is by no means a dirty town, not at any time, yet even so there are things that might be improved. Weeds could be removed from parking strips and from between the pickets of front yard fences without detracting at all from the appearance of the streets.

And peaking of parking spaces—we believe that it would be money well spent if the town would have the park superintendent given added help and improve the sides of the highway through our city. We have seen this done in some towns. It certainly gives a neat and pleasing appearance, and gives the stranger who is passing through town a good impression.

FOR THE BEST QUALIFIED

WHERE is the usual rush of candidates for appointment as judge of the United States district court of northern California to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Judge Partridge. This judgeship terminated with Judge Partridge's death, but was revived by the last session of Congress.

It is entirely worthy for qualified citizens to apply for appointment to the federal courts. That is a position of honor, distinction and opportunity for usefulness. The thing for the government to strive for is to give the judgeship only to one eminently qualified, and to not permit it to be used for the payment of political debts.

Of all the applicants whose names are now or may later be placed before the President that of Hon. H. C. Wyckoff of Watsonville impresses The Union as deserving the highest consideration. Mr. Wyckoff is an able and experienced lawyer; his practice has brought him frequently before the federal bench; he has those qualities which mark the ablest and most admirable judges of American courts

The new judge will discharge a large portion of his duties in Sacramento. It may even happen, and should happen, that an additional federal court district will be established for the Sacramento region and the new judge will have his permanent residence in this capital. But nevertheless, The Sacramento Union has no hesitancy in urging the appointment of the Santa Cruz county man for the present vacancy on the federal bench. For such an appointment would serve the principle of quality and ability for the federal courts.—Sacramento Union.

CALIFORNIA LEGIONAIRES TO GATHER AT SANTA CRUZ

Members of the American Legion, Legion Auxiliary and the Forty and Eight, with their families are coming here from all parts of California for a two-day pilgrimage and entertainment, May 14-15. This is the first affair of this nature ever staged by the Legion in Northern California and will be made an annual event in the future, according to Grand Chef Jack Huston of the Forty and Eight.

The feature of the pilgrimage will be the dedication of one of the large Redwoods in the Santa Cruz grove to the "Californians who served in the World War." Fred F. Bebergall, past department adjutant of the American Legion and the First Grand Chef of the Forty and Eight, will be the speaker of the day. There will also be all forms of sports; bathing, golfing, deep-sea fishing, yachting and a grand ball in the Casino Yacht Club ballroom.

The Santa Cruz Forty and Eight organization, backed by the Santa Cruz business men, is sponsoring the pilgrimage and with the assistance of the Santa Cruz Legion ost and Auxiliary Unit will ast as host to the visiting delegation.

CALIFORNIA ENTERING NEW ERA OF HIGHWAY DEVELOPMENT

California today stands on the threshold of the greatest highway development in its history declared H. J. Brunnier, chairman of the highways committee of the California State Automobile Association, this week in comment on the adoption by the legislature of the gasoline tax and highway fund allocation measures.

"The signing of these bills by Governor Young," said Brunnier, "will set the wheels in motion whereby the state's splendid highway system will be completed on a sound business basis—a basis that will be fair and equitable to all sections of the state."

BUT PATENT MEDICINE FOR HIS WIFE

By Albert P. Duryee, M. D.
Everett, Washington
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

Last summer, while on a vacation in the eastern part of Washington, I stopped for a chat with Harvey, an old acquaintance, a man who is a superior orchardist.

During the course of our conversation he said: "My wife has not been well for some time. She has some trouble with her kidneys. Last night I got this medicine (showing me a bottle of Proprietary medicine) for her. Do you think it is all right for her to take?"

"I don't know," I said. "It is a Proprietary preparation; only the proprietor—the fellow who makes it—knows what's in it."

"That's true," said Harvey, "but it says on the label that it is good for diseases of the kidneys and bladder, for rheumatism, etc., so I thought it must be all right."

"Now just a minute," I interrupted," You are an orchardist—one of the best around here. You have fine trees and produce good fruit . How do you do it? Do you, when you want fine trees and produce good fruit. How do you do it? Do you, when you want to protect your trees from pests, go to the store and ask what they have to sell, or do you by certain ingredients and mix up your own spray, according to the pests which threaten?"

"Oh, I always mix my own sprays."

"Suppose a fellow should happen along here and offer to sell you a preparation that would protect your trees from all pests, and when you asked him what it was composed of, he replied that that it was a secret. Would you use it?"

"I should say not!"

"You would be risking your trees as well as your fruit, wouldn't you?"

"Yes."

"It has always been interesting to me to observe how little we use our business reasoning when it comes to taking care of our own bodies.

"I remember a few years ago a disease attacked your fruit trees. It was a new disease to you and your neighbors. No one seemed to know anything much about it. You cut off a branch of one of the trees and sent it to the State College. They diagnosed the disease and told you the remedy. ease and told you the remedy. and your trees have been free of that disease over since. Now if we used the safe sort of business reasoning in the care of our bodies that we do for our fruit trees, what woud you do about your good wife?"

Without waiting for a reply, I added: "It happens that within a radius of a few miles you have as good doctors as you will find in this state. Would it not be good judgment to send your wife to one of them for a diagnosis and for an outline of treatment, and give her physical well-being as much consideration as you do your fruit trees?"

Harvey got the point with suddenness that was startling. He rose from his chair, went inside the cool living room to the telephone. He was calling the doctor.

WOMEN MUST BE ON GUARD AGAINST CANCER

By Simon Levin, M. D.
Meughton, Mich
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

In the past it has been customary to blame to the "change of life" all the irregularities of the menses. In fact, this "change" received the blame for any alteration in health or actions that the women of the past suffered during that important period beyond 40 years of age, when nature wished only to end their reproductive life. No other fallacy or error in the judgment of health and disease has caused so much sadness, suffering, and untimely deaths as this one. This article deals only with one important sign—i.e., excessive or irregular flowing.

When any woman, whose age is above 30 and whose menses have been regular, has any interruption or disturbance of any sort, a proper medical investigation should immediately be demanded. This applies as well to unmarried woman as the married ones.

Of late it is becoming no uncommon experience for the surgeon to find unusual numbers of unmarried women subject to tumors of the uterus. We grant that these tumors many times are benign in nature, not always cancerous, but let me impress upon you very strongy that they may at any time become so, and there are many fatal complications that may arise at any time to make them very dangerous as they attain great size and irreguarity.

Degeneration like turning into cancer, the growth twisting itself off, becoming infected and causing adhesions to important abdominal organs are dangers that may arise in the life of any growth. We cannot tell, until it occurs, just when a benign growth becomes cancerous—or becomes mechanically dangerous when it still rests within the patient.

Again, fast growing cancers of the body of the womb may attain great size and be beyond surgical or medical care if delayed. Just remember, size is no method of judging the danger of a growth it is the degree of malignancy, its degree of power to grow locally or involve the rest of the body.

You can readily see how desperately important is proper examination by a competent medical man early in the disease. Furthermore, the earlier these conditions are cared for, the more your chances of a good result. Complete removal surgically, and treatment by radium or x-ray are your only assurance of cure.

California Registration

California has the largest number of motor vehicles in proportion to population than any state in the Union, reports the California State Automobile Association, with a ratio of one car to every three persons.

HALMOON BAY MAY GET POWDERED MILK PLANT

A plant for the production of powdered milk from the skim milk of coastside dairies is among the possibilities of Halfmoon Bay, according to George Dunn, editor of the Halfmoon Bay Review. The plant would effect a distinct saving to the dairies of that district as at present the skim milk is almots a loss. Plans call for the erection of a $25,000 plant at or near Halfmoon Bay.

Auto Industry First

The automobile industry ranks first among the nation's industries on the basis of the wholesale value of production, according to the California State Automobile Association.

Automobile Association Urges Forest Fire Prevention

Consider the menace of fire in the open as you do this danger in your home and the toll levied by "The Red Enemy" in the forested areas of California will be reduced to a minimum.

This was the suggestion made this week by William W. Crocker, chairman of the Forestry Committee of the California Automobile Association, in an appeal to motorists to assist in forest fire prevention during the touring season which promises to establish a record for trips to state and national forests of California.

"Pleasure-bent, thousands upon thousands of Californians and visitors to this state are answering the call of the open road," said Crocker. "Statistics show that 2,500,000 people each year go from the valleys and the coast to the mountains for fishing, hunting and camping. The mountains of California, with their forest, lakes and streams are one of our prized possessions, an unsurpassed vacation land.

"Whether 1928 will see our favorite camping ground as they are today or changed into blackened wastes, barren of any living tree or animal, depends upon care with fire. The "Red Enemy" last year levied a heavy toll in destroyed timber, damage to irrigaton and hydroelectric power, in the silting of reservoirs and ditches, the washing away of the soil, the filling up of harbors and the moving of thousands of tons of debris. In the National Forest Reserves there were 1,180 man-caused fires out of a total of 1,702 conflagrations. Outside of the reserves carelessness with fire caused 1,308 fires out of a total of 1,354. Two hundred and fifty thousand acres of timberland are annually burned over as against 51,000 acres cut over for lumber. Care with fire will put a stop to this needless loss of our forest resources.

"If the annual toll paid by the state as the result of carelessness with fire is not reduced it may be necessary to impose drastic restrictions or even close certain forested areas to tourists, campers, fishermen and hunters. While it would be a pity to impose restrictions limiting the use and enjoyment of our mountain playgrounds, it would be a much greater calamity to lose the forests of the state. Guard against fires in the open as you would against fires in your own home and the problem wil be solved."

BOY SCOUTS TO AID IN RELIEF WORK HERE

The Boy Scouts are in a real service to mankind, in getting the names for the Goodwill Industries Salvage Drive, asking the people to gather their old clothing, furniture, stoves, newspapers and magazines and bundle them up in separate bundles, placing them on the sidewalk in front of their homes Saturday morning, May 1, 1927. A Boy Scout will pick them up.

The Goodwill Industries give self-supporting work to old and handicapped people who ask for a chance to earn their living and are too proud to beg or accept charity. This class are by far the most deserving of support, and no one need deprive themselves to assist this most worthy cause, as the Goodwill Industries are asking for contributions in the form of clothing, furniture, stoves, shoes, newspapers and magazines and anything of possible value.

Thousands of unfortunate men and women are made self respecting and self-supporting through such contributions.

Remember the day, Saturday, May 14, 1927, at 9 a. m.

$25,000 FLOOD RELIEF GIVEN BY TELEPHONE CO.

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company, for itself and associated company, the Bell System, which includes the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, has contributed $25,000 to the Red Cross for the relief of the Mississippi River flood sufferers. The company of the Bell System serving the flooded area is co-operating in every way with the Red Cross, the Army Engineers and all relief organizations in the stricken district.

Every effort is being made to maintain the maximum telephone service as an aid in the work of relief and later in rehabilitation. Such lines as are unavoidably out of service will be restored at the earliest possible moment and, while much local telephone service has been necessarily interfered with, the main line of communication to all large centers has been maintained.

COASTSIDE OPPOSED TO REDISTRICTING

That redistricting county supervisorial districts will meet with strong opposition from the coastside of the county was indicated this week with the announcement that the Coastside Civic Union had raised $1000 to fight the issue and would raise more if it were necessary. The matter was discussed Monday night at a meeting of the Civic League, and unconditional opposition to the plans was expressed by the members of the coastside organization.

A fund for fighting the redistricting moveent was raised and given to M. J. Bettencourt, president of the organization. Bettencourt was also authorized to take whatever legal action became necessary to defeat the present plans. Unofficially the members of the Civic League expressed themselves as favoring a change to a charter form of government for the county rather than submit to the redistricting.

The movement to have the county supervisorial districts reapportioned originated in the First and Second townships, where the population is large. The residents of these townships object to the present representation which gives the sparcely settled sections of the county the same representation on the board as the populous sections. Several attempts have been made to have the boundaries of the districts changed. The latest attempt was the filing of a petition recently for a writ of mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to take the action desired by the First and Second townships. This writ was refused by Judge George H. Buck.

Following the refusal of the writ by the judge, the statement was made by Supervisor Poole, chairman of the board that the matter would be given the serious thought of the board.

If carried into effect the plan as proposed would result in the loss to the coastside of the county in one of its present supervisors, and the combining of the present fourth and fifth townships. This is the change which the Civic League will oppose.

TWO WOMEN FOUND HELP

Their Sickness Banished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mrs. Nina Matteson, Box 266, Oxford, N. Y., writes—"If it had not been for your medicine, I could not have done my work as it should have been done. Mother told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I had read in different papers what it had done for different women. She wanted me to try it, so my husband got me one bottle at first; then I took two others. Now I am feeling quite strong again."

Mrs. Ernest Tanguay of Adams, Mass., says she was ill for four years and could not sleep nights or go out on the street. She read about the Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking eight bottles she was able to do all her work and go anywhere and is quite herself again.

This dependable Vegetable Compound is a household word in thousands of homes. The fourth generation is now learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than half a century, this reliable medicine has been used by women with very satisfactory results. If the Vegetable Compound has helped other women, why shouldn't it help you?

Cities Losing Residents

Villages and small towns are again showing increase in population, contrary to popular understanding. As a matter of fact the Institute of Social and Religious Research has found from heretofore unpublished census figures that the rate of city population increase in 1900 to 1920, fell from 84 per cent to 52.1 per cent, while the rural rate was pushed up to 20.7 per cent.

The discrepancy is due to government bookkeeping, according to Robert McCulluch who made a study for the survey. The government automatically changes a town or village to a city when it reaches 2,500 population.

Heals Eczema in 7 Days or Less

Or Your Money Back

Here is a surgeon's wonderful prescription now dispensed by pharmacists at trifling cost, that will do more towards helping you get rid of unsightly spots and skin diseases than anything you've ever used.

Not only does this great healing antiseptic oil promote rapid and healthy healing in open sores and wounds, but boils, abcesses and ulcers that are discharging are almost immediately relieved and cleanly healed.

In skin diseases its action is little less than magical. The itching of eczema is instantly stopped; the eruptions dry up and scale off in a very few days. The same is true of barbers' itch, salt rheum and other irritating and unsightly skin troubles.

You can obtain Moone's Emerald Oil in the original bottle at any modern drug store. It is safe to use, and failure in any of the ailments noted above is next to impossible. Your druggist can supply you at any time.

Warming the Ocean

The German inland watering place Westerland has now been connected with the mainland by railroad. The cars cross the marshes on a newly-erected dam. Westerland is very ambitious and expects to have a winter as well as a summer season. When cold weather comes the bathing cabins are to be heated; also the covered ways leading to the water. And the water itself? That is the most remarkable part of the project. Huge artificial electric "suns" are to be installed, making a winter dip in the sea practicable.

A new type of fowl is being raised in Alberta to supplant the high-priced holiday turkey. A cross between a turkey and a chicken, the "turken" resembles the turkey in head and body, but in size, comb and wattles it is more like the chicken.

Without losing an unnecessary moment, the gambler, recovering his trembling horse, mounted up, crossed the bridge—the wagon close behind—and struck through the brush to the right and into the old trail.

They had hardly entered it before the serious difficulty of making their way up the river was evident. The trail, heavily overgrown with brush, had become impassable by night, and the wagon track had been washed into countless gullies by the rains of years. He rode back trying to think out an escape from his dilemma.

"Dave has an old shack down at Calabasas. I hate to take him among the horse-thieves, but it's any port in a storm. There's a trail from Calabasas through the hills that comes out on the river just above the old beaver dam, and when I can get back to help, we'll get him to camp that way. The trick now will be to turn the wagon around. Unhitch the team and we'll do it by hand."

Selwood took the horses while Pardaloe and Scott, with many pulls, got the wagon to where the horses could handle it again, and the cavalcade struck across the Sinks on the Thief River road toward the famous water hole on the Spanish desert. An hour or so later, with good going, they had reached Calabasas—the haunt of men esteemed, of all men, meanest in the high country.

The holes in the canyons, the tumbledown shacks that sheltered these denizens of Calabasas were still as death when the wagon, guided by Selwood, by lantern, by Scott's instinct, and by main force, halted with as little noise as possible near what Selwood pronounced Tracy's cabin. Selwood got down from his horse and, calling to Scott for the dog, slipped Chloe's muzzle and held her on the leash. The mastiff whinnied and jumped at him, licking his hands as he caught her by the collar and led her toward the cabin door.

Selwood hoped that, with Saturday night and the constant probability that any squatter occupant was more likely to be sleeping there in the daytime than at night, the shack might be unoccupied.

Crawling on the ground and feeling his way to the door from the side, where he was partly protected by the sill log, Selwood got his hand on the lower part of the batten door. It hung, he remembered, on leathern strips, and it stood now in the night partly ajar, seemingly supported only by the upper thong. Chloe, his hand on her collar, pushed her nose into the opening between the door and the jamb and strained at the leash, but she did not growl. Selwood allowed her to crawl inside, which she did with great gusto, held her a moment at the leash's length, and then released her. He could hear the dog scurrying about inside, but knew at once the cabin was empty. Gun in hand, he went to the wagon. Scott passed out a lantern, and Selwood, returning, carefully pulled open the door and entered.

The lantern light revealed a rough table, a rickety chair, and a home-made stool. In the upper left-hand corner stood the double-decked bunk Tracy had built, and in which Selwood had slept the first night—and the only night—he had ever slept in Calabasas. There was coarse bedding in both decks. A rough rock fireplace stood at the lower end of the cabin. Beside the fireplace stood an empty box up-ended. Selwood knew well its use. Like a candle snuffer for a candle, it was there to set over and conceal instantly a fire on the hearth.

In a few moments the three men, by the light of the lantern, had cleaned out the place. The bedding was dumped outside, together with a battered frying-pan and coffee-pot and some canned goods. Kerosene from a handy can was poured freely over the bunk, rubbish was pushed on the hearth and lighted. And with Chloe blinking at the flames, Tracy, still asleep on the cot, was lifted from the wagon backed up to the door into the shack and placed in the corner farthest from the bunk and near the open fire. When Pardaloe and Scott had brought in light supplies for breakfast, Selwood directed the two men to go to sleep in the wagon.

Re-entering the cabin, he sat down beside Tracy. Selwood had been long too busy with life to think of death; but in Tracy's appearance it had seemed more than once of late to stare at him; tonight the old face looked more like death than ever.

The thought of Christie kept flaring, like the fitful flame on the hearth, in his heart. She would have listened to him, he felt, had he been anything but what old Dave was, a common gambler. And what had he to expect but a death such as this if he ended a life like this? Only, at best, a quicker death, a violent death at the hands of some other outcast like himself.

He looked at his watch. To make his rendezvous by midnight he must be on the way home. Home! He had spoken the word in his mind. What right had a homeless man to such a word. Without a woman to make it, there was in his lexicon no such word as home—he had known one home. He woke Scott—Pardaloe was snoring unmercifully—asked the Indian to water his horse, and gave him such instructions as there were to give in case he should not be back by daylight—namely, to run Tracy up river until things had quieted down in Sleepy Cat; and if they heard the gambling hall was burned to tell Tracy, Selwood had gone West.

He swung into the saddle with a light heart, for action is what the soldier, the adventurer, the gambler craves.

Half way into town, emerging from the breaks that skirt the valley of the Rat, he caught a glimpse of a red glare on the northern horizon. He had no need to pause or to surmise what it might be; the Vigilantes were abroad.

Selwood presently halted; he struck a match and looked at his watch; it was only eleven o'clock—something had precipitated the fight—he might be too late to make defense. The faint crackle of gunfire reached his ears—told him more than he needed to know. He quickened his pace; if he were too late to fight for the hall, there was company property to protect. But he had given his word to defend the hall, and wanted to meet the masked crowd where he had promised to meet them.

Reaching the river bottom, Selwood reconnoitered the bridge. Hearted though he was to go forward, he dared not risk crossing it. If the guards had freed themselves, or been freed, they would be eager to shoot from ambush. He rode slowly down the river some three hundred yards, located an old ford and, guiding his horse cautiously into the rapids, allowed it to drink, crossed slowly, headed the horse up the rocky bank, rode up under the bluff, found a break he could get the horse into, and rode out on the river bench, in full sight of the town.

No more than a glance was needed to give the quick-witted gambler the situation. Vigilantes were pushing into the River quarter below him, and burning as they went. But the gunfire, ceasing at times and breaking out sharply anew, told him they were meeting resistance.

He rode well outside the area of the flames and the fighting on the outskirts of the town. In the darkness he rode unmolested; indeed, encountered no one, and came out unobserved on the Falling Wall trail, where he could command the lower end of Fort street, which was on fire. Between him and the conflagration stood his gambling hall, but this lay below the brow of the hill in front of him.

Down Fort street, silent and completely deserted, he rode, wondering whether the smoke rising in the foreground included the ruins of his own building or others; and then, crossing the brow of the hill, he saw the gambling hall just below him.

To his amazement, it stood apparently untouched. Lights were burning inside. Through the partly shaded windows of his place he could see no one moving, nor could he hear any sound. This was cause for suspicion, if not a symptom of danger.

With as little noise as possible, he rode into the grounds north of the hall, dismounted, secured his horse, and with his hand on the grip of his holster gun, walked to the door of his office, in the rear of the building, slipped a key into the door lock and, standing to one side, pressed the latch and threw the door wide open.

Silence greeted the move. Selwood would have given much for a dog, but he had none, and, convincing himself that he might as well take a shot from the dark then as one in the light later, walked boldly into the room, struck a match, lighted the lamp, and closed the door behind him. The room was empty. Everything appeared as he had left it at dusk.

He threw open the door into the gambling-room. The lights were on—not a soul was in sight. But signs of disorder and evidences of hasty departure were everywhere. Glancing collectedly about, drawing rapid inferences from whatever he saw, Selwood looked at his watch. It lacked but a minute of twelve o'clock—perhaps the Vigilantes were coming back to face his threat and finish him and the hall together. As to Big Haynes and Haynes' defenders, he had never for a moment cherished any illusions; everything about the room indicated they had run like rabbits at the approach of danger.

He walked to the front doors. They stood wide open. He looked up and down the street; not a soul was anywhere in sight. Yet the hall, open, brilliantly lighted, stood silent and deserted; it was as if death had suddenly and completely wiped out its denizens—players, onlookers, dealers, everybody. He had returned to defend his place only to find that no one appeared to challenge its right to exist.

Puzzled at the situation, Selwood strode down the broad steps and started for the horse barn. He noticed that the barn lights were burning, particularly the stationary lanterns on both sides of the front door. At the moment he approached the front of the barn, in the shadow of its side a masked man, apparently a Vigilante, hurrying up street, encountered a man running out of the barn itself. The two almost collided. The man from the barn dealt the Vigilante a fearful blow across the head with a club.

The Vigilante, evidently a man of great strength, staggered, but grappled with his enemy, only to receive a second blow that would have felled any but the strongest. The handkerchief, symbol of the raiding party, slipped from his face to his neck, but, dazed as he was, he clinched with his assailant and struggled with him. Selwood, little as he liked the red handkerchief, liked a game fighter, and watched the struggle the dazed man was making against one evidently no better than a cowardly murderer. Though it might be one of his own men, Selwood liked less and less his manner of fighting, and saw, as the two men rolled, panting and cursing, toward him, that the man who used the club was fumbling for his knife.

It was too much to watch a murder. Selwood, with an indignant oath, took a quick step forward. The Vigilante was under, and, as he was rolled on his back, the gambler recognized Abe Cole, the blacksmith; at the same instant he saw the knife raised above him. Selwood, with a vicious kick, sent the knife hurtling across the driveway, and, grabbing the upper man by the collar, brought the butt of his gun down on the man's head and turned his face to the light to see who it was. He had only time to ascertain that the coward was none of his own men, when McAlpin came running out of the barn. In one hand he carried a lantern, and in the other a hatchet—the front and picture of a wild man. Selwood, gripping the throat of the coward, looked up at McAlpin. "Who's this man, Jim?" demanded Selwood sharply. McAlpin amazed at the sight of Selwood, was, at no loss for words. "A firebug!" he cried, "Kill him! They're after horses. I caught him and he tried to murder me."

"Throw me a couple of halter straps or a piece of rope. You look to Cole," exclaimed Selwood. With a skull clearly club-proof, the fighting blacksmith was staggering to his feet. Cole recognized Selwood. "That was a close squeak, John, cried Cole. "He'd had a knife into me. I know the blamed thief. He's one of them river rats—kill him."

"Turn him over to your Vigilantes with my compliments," responded Selwood, rising from the man he had tied. "Why don't they come my way up the hill?" he asked of Cole, tauntingly.

"The orders is out not to burn you, John—that's why. Look after this bird a bit, Jim"—Cole pointed to the horse thief and addressed McAlpin—"till I get help. We'll string him up."

McAlpin rubbed his hands in cheerful anticipation; Cole ran off, rubbing his head. Selwood spoke sharply to the barn boss: "What's become of Fyler?"

"The girl was over to see if they could get a team and a wagon, John. She was afraid they'd be after her father. I told her to come back for it—she didn't come. I drove it down to the store. The place was dark and locked up. They were gone—God knows where. I seen Bull Page. He's sober—scared to death for fear they'll hang him."

"Where are your hostlers?" demanded Selwood, upset.

"Out with them dashed Vigilantes—couldn't hold 'em back—not a man-Jack of 'em. Lefever's got his teamsters over in the warehouse and the bunkhouse."

The gambler hardly heard the answer. A panic had seized him. Too late he realized the danger to which Christie had been exposed—the danger to which he had left her.

He ordered McAlpin to put out the lights, close the barn, and shoot anybody who tried to get in. Down street he heard shouting; the Vigilantes were coming to get the horse thief. McAlpin, with all speed, was closing the barn doors. Selwood, stooping, picked up the red handkerchief that had fallen from Cole's neck, and, thrusting it into his pocket, slipped around the corner of the barn and hurried up the hill.

A moment later he stood alone in the center of the gambling-hall. His eyes, running over the room, fell on the shelf behind his desk. There stood the glass dome covering again the good-luck shoe he had brought from the Crawling Stone, and to which he still stubbornly clung. He set aside the dome and thrust the shoe into his coat pocket. Turning, he saw on the wall the print of the padre. He pried it loose, folded and put it into a breast pocket, and, going back to the middle of the room, drew down the big center lamp.

It was a large, old-fashioned kerosene lamp, raised and lowered, in its shiny frame, on sticky brass chains and pulleys. Of all the lamps in the hall, the big center lamp was Bull Page's pride, and its glass bowl held a quart of kerosene.

The lamp was hot. The blaze scorched Selwood's eyes as he looked into it. He lifted the bowl carefully out of the frame and balanced it. Once more he looked about him. Then, drawing back, he hurled the burning lamp with both hands far across the floor.

It crashed into a thousand pieces. There was a blinding explosion. A burst of flame leaped toward the ceiling. A hundred darting tongues licked at the gaudy velour hangings and ran like blazing powder up the silken shades; they careened wildly along the burning floor and wrapped their curling arms around overstuffed chairs and mahogany tables. Step by step, Selwood retreated before the destruction. At the door he paused—as if to be sure the hall was doomed. Then, running to his frightened horse, he sprang into the saddle.

Heading for the river, he spurred relentlessly. And not looking back, one man rode that night out of Sleepy Cat with a bad chapter in his life closed behind him.

CHAPTER XII

The Night at Calabasas.

Selwood's orders had been to leave Tracy in the shack in complete darkness, after the hearth fire died down, for the night. Scott, punctilious as a soldier and hardened to discomfort, had stood his watch outside. When, at the end of it, he called Pardaloe, asleep in the wagon, and the big guard, stiffened with the night chill of the desert, roused himself for his turn and pulled his shotgun out of the wagon, the nipping air settled on his neck and shoulders like molded ice. After Scott had crawled into the warm place, a stern resolve to obey orders gradually congealed within Pardaloe into the conviction that he could stand guard as well inside the cabin as outside. Where the silence was so intense that the sneeze of a gopher would alarm every living thing about a water hole, Pardaloe felt, perhaps rightly, that no human being could possibly sneak up on him unawares.

Once inside, on the job, the embers dying on the hearth pleaded, together with Pardaloe's benumbed joints, for a new lease of life. Tracy was breathing regularly, and Pardaloe, cautiously scraping the fragments of fire together with the fireproof ends of his fingers, laid a few chips of wood across them and turned himself for a few minutes into a quiet but energetic bellows.

Sitting, giant-like, over the tiny blaze he coaxed thus from the darkness, the big fellow stared into it a few minutes, pulled his shotgun handily up beside him on the earthen floor, drew from a hip pocket a pack of cards, dusted off a space below the fire with his hat, and began his solitaire.

When Tracy, half an hour later, woke from his heavy sleep and opened his eyes on the dim and mysterious scene before him, he might well have thought himself in a frontier nightmare. A smoky lantern burned vaguely on the hearth, and the uncertain light from the dying fire threw Pardaloe's huge bulk grotesquely up on the ceiling. Tracy, lifting himself slowly on his elbow, looked with blinking eyes and tried, as he stared, to collect his sluggish faculties.

It was not very long before he perceived that the fancied bandit, looming over the spurting flame while counting ill-gotten spoil, was only playing some sort of a game of cards. And when Pardaloe turned his head sidewise—as he did at intervals—Tracy thought that the bulky torso outlined on the wall and ceiling and the disreputable slant of the shapeless hat on the mule boss' head, betokened some one much like Bill Pardaloe.

Once convinced of this, Tracy was not slow in asking questions—which he made frequent and sharp. Pardaloe, beyond acknowledging his identity was loath to talk, shrewdly reckoning that if there were explaining to be done, Selwood would prefer to do it himself.

In these circumstances, it was no time before Tracy and Pardaloe were at tart exchanges.

"Ain't no use your gettin' sassy, Dave, not a bit," urged Pardaloe at length. "Wait till the boss comes, with your questions, 'n' be hanged to you."

"Well, he may be your boss but he ain't mine, not by a jugful," sputtered Tracy. "Where is he?"

"Sleepy Cat, I reckon. No!" he exclaimed, contradicting himself suddenly, grabbing his shotgun and springing to his feet with all the celerity and something of the grace of a grizzly bear. "No!" he repeated, standing for an instant silent and alert; for as the radio picks the music of a human voice out of the silent air, Pardaloe's trained ear had drawn from the perfect silence of the desert night the echo of distant hoofbeats. "The boss ain't in Sleepy Cat. For if that ain't a hostyle visitor, it's himself a-comin' now!"

To scatter with a deft kick what was left of the fire, sweep up the grimy cards with the expertness of an old acquaintance, and to blow out the half-dead flame in the lantern, was all the work of a surprisingly few seconds, and Pardaloe in fewer added seconds was outside the tippy door, where he belonged, and on guard, as he belonged. It was Selwood, as he had surmised, and Scott's regular breathing in the wagon was checked only long enough to assure himself almost without waking that all was well in the coming of the horseman.

Pardaloe could answer all questions satisfactorily because there was nothing whatever to report. He asked in turn for the latest news from Sleepy Cat; listened, wonderstruck, to the scraps of news from the fires and the fighting; shook himself at each startling sentence and complained he was missing it all.

Selwood had no sooner stuck his head inside the door of the shack than his impatient patient within called out: "Who's there?"

"Nobody but me, Dave," answered Selwood.

He sat down beside Tracy and explained what had happened—told him what he had done in abducting him. Not without bitter remonstrance on Tracy's part, not without outbursts of protest at what the old gambler characterized as despicable conduct involving the loss of every dollar the two had in the world, at Sleepy Cat.

Selwood listened patiently. "Well," he suggested, good-naturedly at length, "it's nothing new for a gambler to be broke—nor for a pair of gamblers, is it?"

Tracy was not to be placated, and he made no effort to conceal his disgust. "You're a queer kind of a gambler," he muttered. Then, gaining courage, as Selwood sat silent, to venture weightier abuse, he continued: "Fact is, you ain't no gambler at all—"

Selwood interrupted him with a somewhat disquieting assent. "So you've said before, Dave. I've come to the same conclusion, myself."

"—not accordin' to my notion," persisted Tracy, backing water just a little bit.

"Nor mine," interposed Selwood firmly.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Flood Loss Tremendous—Hoover in Command—Beveridge Dies.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THREE hundred lives lost, two thousand men, women and children driven from their homes, material damage running up into the hundreds of millions. That, roughly, is the price paid by the Mississippi valley this time for the failure to establish flood control.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover, at the instance of President Coolidge, took personal charge of the situation at the beginning of the week, going to Memphis, thence down the river to New Orleans. On Thursday, he thought, the worst was over for the region north of Vicksburg, but conditions south of there were growing more serious as the crest of the flood passed on south. The return waters from the levee breaks in Arkansas, northern Mississippi and northern Louisiana were getting back into the river and the peril of New Orleans with its 400,000 inhabitants was so great that Mr. Hoover and Major General Jadwin, chief of army engineers, also on the ground, recommended that the levee be cut near Poydras, ten miles south of the Crescent city, to relieve the pressure. The War department gave its consent to this radical action and the break was made. The immediate consequence was the flooding of St. Bernard and Plaquemines parishes by the waters rushing across to Lake Borgne, an inlet from the Gulf of Mexico. The hundreds of farmers in those parishes had been ordered to move out with their families and live stock, but of course their property loss is immense. The entire National Guard of Louisiana was ordered out to help in the evacuation of the region and to suppress the threatened resistance of some of the inhabitants. Mr. Hoover appointed Col. Lon M. Parker director of the flood situation in Louisiana, with dictatorial powers. Both the secretary and General Jadwin were greatly concerned by conditions along the west bank of the Mississippi between Vicksburg and Natchez where immense crevasses were expected unless the work of strengthening the levees could prevent them.

Urged on by President Coolidge, measures for the relief of the flood sufferers were carried out efficiently and swiftly by the national and state governments and by innumerable organizations. All contributions were made to and the work done by the Red Cross, and the federal and state troops gave efficient aid. Steamers and other boats plied up and down the river removing refugees from the levees and high spots and concentrating them in camps and towns. Steps were taken to check the threatened spread of malaria, pellagra and other maladies, and vast quantities of clothing, food and other supplies were received by train and boat. President Coolidge had called on the nation to raise a fund of $5,000,000, and by the close of the week almost the entire sum had been collected and turned over to the Red Cross.

Secretary Hoover voiced the opinion of all thinking persons when he declared the nation should take a lesson from this disaster. "The floods of the Mississippi river and its tributaries can be controlled if adequate engineering works are installed," he said. These would cost a minor part of this single loss. Thirty states have contributed water to this flood, but of more positive interest is the fact that no part of the nation can suffer a loss without that loss reflecting onto every other part. The people in this vast region who contribute much to national wealth and prosperity should be relieved of this anxiety and terror. It is a national problem and must be solved nationally and vigorously."

SPEAKING in New York at the anniversary dinner of the United Press, President Coolidge outlined the attitude of the government toward Mexico, Nicaragua and China and made an appeal for pure Americanism. He declared there is no trace of imperialism in the foreign policies of the administration and said those policies deserve the undivided support of American publishers. Concerning Mexico, he said our government stands squarely on the understanding with Obregon, but he does not expect any armed conflict since Mexico indicates that the confiscation of American property is not intended. The presence of American forces in Nicaragua was explained and justified, and the President then took up the Chinese question. He said final disposition of the Nanking incident rests in further consideration of the matter by the American government. The President reiterated that the United States is ready to negotiate a treaty giving China complete tariff autonomy and releasing extraterritoriality rights as soon as China is prepared to give protection to American citizens and their property. Meantime he insisted our forces "are in China to do what China itself would do if peace prevailed."

NEWS from China was somewhat obscure, but it is certain that a three-cornered contest is on for control of the Nationalist party. Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, moderate leader, was advancing his troops toward Hankow, and the Communist faction there was "digging in" to resist them. Meanwhile the Nationalists at Canton had declared their independence from both those factions. The northern forces at Pukow on the north bank of the Yangtse were reported to have made an attempt to cross the river near Nanking and to have been repulsed with heavy loss. It was said the batteries at Nanking sank every boat of the northerners. From both banks of the river American and British warships were subjected to gunfire and several Americans were wounded on the gunboat Penguin. Reports were received of the movement of several armies in various parts of China, but their exact affiliations and destinations were unknown.

President Coolidge's seeming reluctance to join the British in taking drastic action against those responsible for the Nanking outrages has enraged the British residents and press in Shanghai and Peking. They assert he and Secretary Kellogg are deliberately ignoring the reports and advice of American consular officials there.

Dispatches from Peking said Marshal Chang was seeking alignment with certain elements of the south China Nationalists, and that he might assume a dictatorship under the title of provisional president and call a constitutional convention. He is forming nine new armies to combat the advance of Feng Yu-hsiang, the Christian general, down the Yellow river.

PEACE in Nicaragua is in sight, for Doctor Sacasa, liberal leader, has accepted the proposal for a conference in Managua, made by Henry L. Stinson, representing President Coolidge, and has sent three members of his cabinet to the meeting.

DEATH came suddenly Wednesday to a man who had been one of the most interesting and prominent of Americans of his day in politics and who had in his later years achieved distinction in letters. Albert J. Beveridge succumbed to a heart ailment at his home in Indianapolis, and two days after his body was laid at rest beside the grave of James Whitcomb Riley, the beloved Indiana poet. Born and brought up on an Ohio farm, Mr. Beveridge made his way through grade school and Depauw university and adopted law as his profession. He became noted for his eloquence and when he entered politics soon was recognized as a leader. He represented Indiana in the United States senate for twelve years, from 1899 to 1911. He was one of Roosevelt's strongest adherents in the Progressive party, but became "regular" again in 1916. His most notable literary work is a monumental biography of John Marshall which is considered an authoritative history of the early years of the Supreme court. At the time of his death he was engaged in writing an equally ambitious life of Abraham Lincoln. His passing is a serious loss to American public life and literature.

TWO more aviators perished last week in the preparations for attempted nonstop flights across the Atlantic from New York to Paris. Lieut. Com. Noel Davis and Lieut. Stanton Wooster of the navy were testing the giant plane "American Legion" in which they hoped to make the flight, when some trouble developed and it landed in a marsh near Newport News, Va., and flopped over, killing both flyers. The tragedy has not deterred others from going on with their plans for trying to win the Orteig prize. Flyers will start from both New York and Paris.

WILLIAM WRIGLEY, JR., of Chicago, said he had been led to believe that President Coolidge had decided to accept his offer of the beautiful Wrigley summer home on Lake Geneva, Wis., for his vacation residence. The lake is eighty miles north of Chicago, and the Wrigley home, "Green Gables," is one of the finest of the establishments in the so-called "millionaires' row." The house, situated close to the shore in beautiful woods, has twenty rooms, all exquisitely appointed. A private bathing beach and Mr. Wrigley's fleet of sail and power boats would be at the disposal of the President's household. In addition to the mansion, a ten-room cottage and several smaller buildings, including a lodge at the gates, dot the property.

INSISTING that the Catholic episcopate of Mexico was primarily responsible for the recent train massacre in Jalisco and that it has been fomenting continual revolt against the government, President Calles has deported Archbishop Mora y del Rio and seven other leading churchmen. Some of them came across the border into the United States. The federal troops also went after the bandits who committed the outrage and at latest reports had killed some sixty of them. In several other conflicts with rebel bands the government forces were victorious and in each case priests who were leading the rebels were killed.

THERE will be no general international disarmament agreement this year, anyhow. This was made certain when the League of Nation's preliminary commission adjourned without having come to an understanding. It will make a report to the league assembly in September showing the disagreements of the various nations, most of which listed a number of reservations. Count von Bernstorff, the German delegate, in a private statement, said: "The value of the conference has been in showing clearly the different opinions. Disarmament is the true role of the League, but the instructions of the various governments to their delegations show little desire for actual disarmament. The public certainly is disillusioned."

SOVIET WAR MINISTER VOROSSILOFF told the all-union soviet congress in Moscow that Russian women as well as men must undergo some sort of military training, and was warmly applauded by the many women delegates. The minister denied the British "fairy tale" that Russia has the world's largest standing army, with 10,000,000 reservists. The real number of the Russian forces under arms is 600,000, of whom 100,000 are permanent noncommissioned officers, he said.

WILLIAM GIBBS M'ADOO has been visiting New York, and when he left he was confident that he had assisted the dry elements in the North and West in so consolidating that the nomination of Gov. Al Smith for the Presidency by the Democratic party would be impossible. The Anti-Saloon league leaders felt the same way about it. McAdoo's demand that Smith withdraw from the race for the good of the party is naturally ignored by the governor, for he has not declared himself a candidate. On behalf of Smith it is said he is only waiting for an opportune time to meet the challenge of those demanding a further expression of his views on prohibition. His close friends assert he is not nearly so wet as he has been painted and will be able to satisfy the law enforcement group of his party. Washington has invited the Democrats to hold the convention of 1928 in the national capital.

Vatican Archives to Be Properly Indexed

Priceless documentary material, which may necessitate the rewriting of much of medieval history, soon will be placed at the disposal of students through the institution in the vatican archives of a modern index-ing system.

The present index of 658 huge volumes, which was compiled over a period of many centuries, is obscure and complicated. To replace it, Monsignor Angelo Mercat, prefect of apostolic archives, has begun compiling a complex analytical inventory with a cross index system on the lines of that used by the American Library congress.

So vast is the vatican collection that for the time being work is confined to four sections—namely, vatican registers, registers of Lateran archives of the period when popes occupied lateran instead of vatican palace, records of the papal court and a record of consistories. Of these the first three virtually have been shut to historians because of the archaic system of indexing.

The Lateran register, in 2,460 volumes, contains among other things, all papal bulls from 1389 to 1897, court records in 1,111 volumes dating from 1276 until 1700, consistorial records which date from the fifteenth century to the Napoleonic period, and one expected to throw new light on the lives and activities of hundreds of cardinals who contributed to make European history.

CHIC BLACK AND WHITE EFFECTS; CUTE GINGHAM ROMPER SUITS

REVERSE the order of black-and-white and you have white-and-black. The mode is doing just that. White with just enough black not to destroy its daintiness is the promise of summer apparel. The vogue extends to footwear, headwear and all the accessories which go to make up a perfect ensemble.

Adorable for summer frocks are the white-with-black georgettes printed in entrancing floral patterns. These are forecasted to enjoy a tremendous vogue. If a frock should, perchance, escape being made of a white-and-black transparency of some sort or cuffs are elaborately black embroidered, or later still, beaded; hats of white violets or for mid-summer, the transparent black or white wide brimmed capeline—these are all included in fashion's white-with-black program.

A modern playground, where children of the well-to-do are wont to congregate presents rather an appearance of a Lilliputian style-show, with miniature mannikins all "dolled up" in fetching frocks and rompers, with cunning socks to match and amusing little sweaters, or perhaps a protecting coatee, with possibly a hat other, it will be because the designer preferred to work out the combination by using black as a trimming on white. The accompanying illustration demonstrates the idea most beautifully.

A fascinating effect results when the hemline is embellished (see the figure to the left) with myriads of hemstitched black chiffon petals piled one upon another, so that when milady steps her frock expresses a very "poetry of motion." The manner in which the drapery of this dress is brought to the front in a bow tie is very enlightening as to a popular style now and then. Even their little tin pails and shovels, their jumping ropes, dolls 'n everything seem selected from the standpoint of fitting into the color scheme.

Mother does not say any more of her child's simple play frock: "I'll just run it together in a hurry." She goes about her sewing preparedly—seeks the latest patterns, studies up on newest embroidery and applique ideas. As to choosing materials, that is the most important thing of all.

Of course with most mothers "gingham first" is the sentiment. If wise as to fashion's trend these doting mothers will make it a rule to always buy a solid color for trimming. Even the simplest rompers exploit the compose idea nowadays. The gay-patterned gingham rompers in the picture cleverly takes unto itself raglan sleeves made of a solid color, with pockets to match. It is well to remember in selecting patterns for tots' frocks and rompers that raglan sleeves are the "last word." Note, too, the touch of smocking across the front neckline of this romper model. Few coats or frocks, these days, escape the smocking vogue.

trend. For the matron no more appropriate costume can be conceived of than this combination afternoon and dinner dress. We say "combination" advisedly for it is designed with a coat which, removed, reveals a charming after-six-o'clock gown.

An interesting interpretation of white-with-black is given in the model to the right. It is of handsome white crepe satin, an applique of black supplying the decorative note. The coat is silver gray with a blended twin beaver collar.

And the shoes, the gloves, the hats to wear with frocks such as these! Slippers of suave white kidskin, piped or appliqued with black, gloves whose

"Beware, my son, beware!"

"Stay away from Peterman's! It has killed your whole family!"

"DON'T walk through it. Don't smell it. Don't touch it. Go hungry for days first."

She's right. Peterman's Roach Food exterminates every roach in your house. Nothing is left but a little dry dust.

Some housewives make the mistake of fighting cockroaches with a spray. Those are the houses roaches stay in. They live down behind baseboards, under the floors. No spray can possibly reach them, or their young, or their eggs.

Only a powder can exterminate them. Peterman's Roach Food is the right powder. Just one roach gets a little powder on his legs. Back to his nest he goes. He crawls over the others and eggs. Every roach he touches dies and disintegrates.

Here is the right insecticide for each insect:

PETERMAN'S ROACH FOOD exterminates cockroaches.
PETERMAN'S ANT FOOD exterminates ants.
FLYOSAN kills flies and mosquitoes.
PETERMAN'S DISCOVERY exterminates bedbugs.
PETERMAN'S MOTH FOOD protects against moths.

You must have a specific insecticide for each insect. No single insecticide will exterminate them all. We know that is true. We have had nearly 50 years' experience.

Peterman's has the right insecticide for each insect. On sale wherever drugs are sold.
